Dirty dancin' thrusts club into spotlight

Nude acts may test tolerance

By LYNN KEEBAUGH

Before this spring it was easy to ignore. The square brown building with the discreet, almost unnoticeable sign on the roof didn't attract much attention from Federal Way residents.

But the Lucky Lady topless dance club at 31656 Pacific Highway S. closed earlier this year when the owner failed to pay rent. Consequently, the business was evicted by the club's landlord, Deja Vu, which bought the building 18 months ago.

Now the building is almost impossible to ignore. Covered with a fresh coat of gray and black paint and garnished with large white lettering next to a pair of net-stockinged legs, Deja Vu, a totally nude dance club, is attracting considerably more attention.

The sign on the front of the building makes the same boast as the other four Deja Vu clubs throughout the state: "50 Beautiful Girls & Three Ugly Ones."

PRIOR TO becoming Deja Vu, the club was something the community, save for club patrons, chose to ignore. Police made periodic visits to cite dancers for infractions of the entertainment ordinance that prohibits nude dancing off-stage and touching the customers, but say they had few problems not related to the dancers.

Recently, however, concern over the desirability of topless and nude dance clubs and the possibility of them attracting prostitution and drug activity was raised by one local woman and by a panelist's question at a Federal Way Chamber of Commerce candidate forum. It was raised again by a candidate at a later forum.

King County police sent Vice Control Unit officers into the club Aug. 14. They made two arrests. One 29-year-old dancer was arrested for offering and agreeing to an act of prostitution and another 24-year-old dancer was cited for violating the county's laws regarding obscene dance.

Sgt. Frank Kinney said his officers can always make such arrests when they go into clubs, but he doesn't believe other types of crimes are more prevalent there than at taverns or lounges.

NUDE DANCE CLUBS such as Deja Vu on Pacific Highway South raise the ire of Marla Soler of Sea-Tac. She's afraid the business will bring an undesirable element to the community and worries that its location in downtown Federal Way exposes the business to youngsters, like the teen who happened by on his skateboard last week.

He also said the prostitution arrest was the first his officers have made since they began enforcing the 1985 ordinance last year. Enforcement was delayed by a court challenge of the ordinance, which failed.

Sgt. Frank Tension of Precinct 5 has lived in Federal Way for 23 years and worked here for many of those years. He recalls only a few incidents at the club that were not dance-related.

WHAT LOCALS might find on a given night if they venture into the club is a bouncer clad in evening clothes who collects the $5 cover charge and warns patrons that only non-alcoholic beverages are served and that they must be 18 years old to enter.

Inside, the club is dark, almost cave-like. The only illumination comes from dimly lit ceiling lights and the bright, swirling lights focused on the mirrored stage.

On that stage a young woman gyrates and writhes. Scantly clad at first, she is soon naked;

Pair of new stores are joining Costco

Two new out-of-state stores will flank the Federal Way Costco, near South 348th Street, by March 1990.

GI Joe's, an Oregon-based chain that sells sporting goods, automotive products, active wear and hardware, will build a 56,000-square-foot store in Campus Square, a shopping center at South 348th Street and 16th Avenue South that is now host only to Costco.

Office Club, a California-based chain of warehouse-style office supply stores, will open a 22,750-square-foot store there.

The GI Joe store will be the first Seattle-area outlet for that company. Office Club stores are now open in Bellevue and south Seattle.

Both will be located in free-standing buildings, to be constructed at the site by March. Armada/Lagerquist, developers of Campus Square, expect to have a total of 10 free-standing buildings finished at the site by next August. Other tenants have yet to be announced.

THE 36-YEAR-OLD GI Joe's chain now includes 13 stores, one in Vancouver, Wash., and the rest in Oregon. Norm Daniels, marketing director

Task force tackles sex crimes

By WENDY CULVERWELL

Few news stories have raised the public's collective blood pressure more than the news that the man accused of raping and mutilating a Tacoma boy has a history of sex crimes against children.

Coming amidst a rash of other assault charges against convicted sex offenders, including the rape and attempted murder of a 15-year-old Federal Way girl in West Campus, it's not difficult to see why normally quiet citizens feel compelled to scream "enough!"

In response to demands that something be done about sex offenders preying on the public, Gov. Booth Gardner formed a task force last month to identify why such crimes are taking place and how laws can be amended to prevent them.

Gardner named King County Prosecutor Norm Maleng to head the Task Force on Community Protection, and gave him until Dec. 1 to make his recommendations.

The task force is as interested in hearing from the public as it is in educating it about the legal web that is supposed to catch such criminals.

The first of two rounds of public hearings will begin this week, with forums scheduled throughout the state. The nearest one to South King County will be held from 7 to 9 p.m., commitment for people who have committed sex crimes in the past, or threaten to do so in the future, or have demonstrated that intent while incarcerated, or seem likely to commit one in the opinion of a professional sex-offender therapist.

- Establish secure facilities for likely sex offenders who have been committed civilly.

- Establish a system of notifying the public about sexually violent offenders.

- Promote greater exchange of information between the mental health and criminal justice systems.

- Identify potential repeat offenders through genetic (DNA) testing.

Burner EIS underway

Study's time frame concerns citizens

By ANN S. HARTMAN

Consultants hired to study Tacoma's incinerator should look through 1989 spectacles instead of 1986 lenses, say some citizens.

Some residents of Northeast and North Tacoma are concerned that an environmental study now underway for the incinerator on the tidelands will not effectively assess any alternatives to opening the plant. The environmental impact statement (EIS) scoping document indicates consultants Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Quade and Douglas don't plan to study alternatives open to Tacoma after 1986.

The incinerator, owned by Tacoma Public Utilities, is scheduled to begin burning sorted garbage, wood waste and coal by early next year. Its permit to operate was granted in 1986, and consultants say they might not consider alternatives to the plant available after that date because those options did not exist when the plant was approved for construction.

Residents objected to that approach Thursday evening at a public hearing to gather comments about the preliminary EIS document, which outlines the scope of the study. About 30 people, mostly from Northeast Tacoma and Federal Way, showed up for the meeting in the cafeteria of the public utilities building, including several Parsons, Brinckerhoff consultants and representatives from Tacoma City Light, Tacoma Refuse Utility and EnviroSphere, another consulting company working on the incinerator project.

IN A LARGE group discussion with the consultants and in several small group discussions, residents Linda White of Northeast Tacoma and Cheryl Miller of North Tacoma questioned the decision not to study incinerator alternatives available after 1986.

"Here we have a 1989 time frame and 1989 laws," said Miller. "And they're saying they're going to roll back the clock. That's not appropriate."

Some alternatives that might be left out of the study are the options of not burning garbage at the plant, hauling garbage out of the county and recycling, Miller said. Although all of these options may have been open to the city prior to 1986, they were not considered feasible for one reason or another, Miller said, and therefore may not be included in the EIS.

"It's like saying they're going to do half an EIS," Miller responded. "You cannot discuss alternatives three years ago when you're dealing with today."

But Steve Wolf, project manager for the EIS, said the approach to the study is fair.

City must consider human-services plan

What constitutes human services issues? What human services programs are currently provided by the county? Which programs/agencies will lose county funding as a result of the incorporations? When will the county funding reduction occur and how much will the reduction be? What is the funding contribution of other suburban cities to these agencies/programs? What is the Human Services Roundtable?

These are some of the questions that Maureen McLaughlin, director of the King County Department of Human Resources, will address when she speaks at a community forum on Aug. 30.

Dr. Bud Nicola, director of the Seattle/King County Health Department, will also attend and will give a slide presentation entitled: "Your Health Department." Delivery of health services on a "full cost recovery" basis is one of the changes now being considered by the county.

The forum is being presented by the Health and Human Services Committee of the Federal Way First! Transition Team. The forum begins at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 30, at the Federal Way School District, Educational Service Center, 31405 18th Ave. So. It is open to the public.

Yvonne Sullivan, a member of our committee, in her role as director of the Federal Way Senior Center, held a forum on Aug. 17 for the local candidates to discuss questions about funding for the center and senior citizen needs. The other committee members are Pat Erwin, Bobbie Bronson, John Metcalf, Terry Fullerton, Lyn Simkins, Pat Rodgers and myself.

Because of funding changes, the committee has been researching other cities throughout the summer to see how they meet the needs of their communities. The Georgette Study said Redmond, Kent, and Everett would be good "case studies" because of one or more similarities: rapid growth, common interests, employment, population, or proximity to Federal Way. We also included Bellevue and Renton. The senior centers, youth service bureaus, mental health, housing and health-care delivery were our areas of focus.

We have gathered organizational charts, budgets, structures for human services commissions or advisory committees and studies documenting trends for the area. The low income population of the elderly population will be a larger percent of the total population, the proportion of the elderly population will increase, the increase in domestic violence, the number of single family households, and the lack of affordable housing all are trends that impact the need for human services.

Cities in the King County area are experiencing increasing involvement in human services as a result of changes within the community and outside of the community. There have been significant reductions in federal expenditures and Community Development Block Grants as well as relatively flat or declining revenues and expenditures from the state of Washington.

At the present time there are many service providers in the Federal Way area — agencies, churches, service organizations — all are in some manner networking to help fill the gaps while at the same time trying not to duplicate services.

What our newly elected council members will have to consider is what role the city will want to play in working with these providers — planner, facilitator, or both. It will also be important to develop a comprehensive plan for our new city. But a comprehensive plan is not just land use — it is transportation, environment, housing, energy and human services. Helping to provide a quality of life for all people helps enrich the community as a whole.

This is another in a continuing series of articles submitted by the Federal Way First! Transition Team, a volunteer advisory group of local residents working to ease the transition to cityhood. This article was written by Nancy McEleney, chair of the Health and Human Services Committee. The team has an office at 700 S. 320th St. The phone number is 839-2805.

"That's a wide open question. I don't think I have a price on that one. I don't think I'd consider it, no matter what."

Freitas offers city leadership abilities

Editor: As the Federal Way City Council campaign comes out of the "dog days" of summer, I have noticed some striking differences between the candidates for Pos. 2.

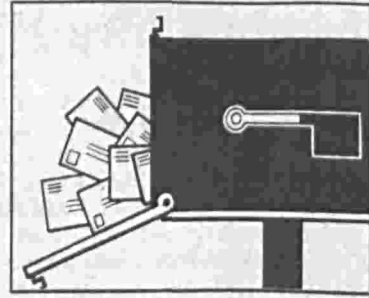

Joel Marks' campaign literature lists many committees he has served on, but there is a noticeable lack of any leadership positions.

Mark Freitas was fund raising chairman for the 1985 Home Rule Committee; he is on the board of directors for the Greater Federal Way Chamber of Commerce; and he has chaired the Economic Development Committee. He is chairman of the chamber's Pool Committee, and he has helped bring the Goodwill Games to Federal Way — a project that will serve our community long after the Goodwill Games have ended.

I want my city council to be composed of people who are experienced leaders!

Joel Marks seems infatuated with the idea of contracting for city services. This may be a fine idea, but what experience does he have in contract services or negotiating contracts?

Joel Marks keeps touting "no new taxes," and is telling the voters what they want and hope to hear. When asked how the city will pay for special projects he advocated floating bonds. The people of Federal Way must know that bonds are paid through real estate taxes!

Mark Freitas takes a more realistic and honest approach to the tax issue: he prefers to wait and see. The city budget has yet to be planned; the contracts for city services have yet to be negotiated; the needs and wants of the citizens of Federal Way have yet to be analyzed and heard. Mark Freitas will not paint himself into a corner by promising "no new taxes."

Federal Way needs Mark Freitas; a man who has leadership experience, contract experience, and who is independent of thought. A man who is a self-sacrificing hard worker who will very thoughtfully and capably address the concerns, needs, and interests of the citizens of Federal Way.

Soviet trip changes teens' outlook

Guest Opinion

By Tina Saravanja and Kirsten Trout

Our experiences began in December of 1988 when, after beginning a DECA project on the promotion of the Goodwill Games, we attended a meeting with Bob Walsh, president of the Seattle Organizing Committee for the Goodwill Games.

Mr. Walsh invited us to go to the Soviet Union with him as well as other business people in the Seattle area. After months of planning and saving, our adventures began.

We arrived at the Moscow airport July 18 about 1:30 a.m. after 28 hours of traveling. It was pitch black outside, due to the fact that there were no street lights or neon signs, and rarely do they use their car headlights.

Our first day in Moscow brought us to GUM, a famous department store, and Red Square. GUM was an enormous cement and marble building that has a different store for each item. In order to buy something at any store, you have to first go to the cashier, pay, get a receipt, and then take it back to the counter and show the salesperson what you would like to purchase.

Our view of the Soviet retail system was that it was quite inefficient and time-consuming. However, in the Soviet Union, many people do not work because there is virtually no motivation or desire to excel.

Red Square is the home of St. Basil's Cathedral, Lenin's tomb, and GUM, all of which are gorgeous architectural monuments to Soviet history.

We found the people of Moscow as well as their way of life more interesting than the sights themselves. Tips were given in the form of make-up, tapes, nylons, and cigarettes, due to the fact that it is illegal to give Soviet residents hard currency.

It was impossible to even walk down the street without being accosted by kids between the ages of 10 and 20, wanting to trade rubles for dollars. They would give you 10 rubles for a dollar when the legal trade in banks is 4 rubles to the dollar. This proves how desperate they are for hard currency. Stores that sell a variety of goods, such as decent clothes and western items, only accept hard currency.

Another highlight of our trip was a Soviet press conference where Bob Walsh was speaking. A reporter from the Soviet newspaper, "Sport," asked what the two of us were doing in the Soviet Union and how we were helping with the Goodwill Games. We ended up speaking that night on Soviet television.

We left the Soviet Union with an entirely different outlook on their country, as well as ours. We quickly learned to appreciate small conveniences such as grocery stores, fast food, department stores, newspapers and TV. Their world is entirely different from ours, but is slowly reforming. We would both love to go back in 10 or 15 years to see the changes that have been made.

However, we still have many more things to do in the next year to prepare for the Goodwill Games and to complete our marketing project as well as we possibly can.

Our future endeavors include a marketing plan for North Shore Golf Course to bring Games spectators to the course. Also, we are helping with pen pal exchanges to the Soviet Union (set up during our recent trip), and promotion of the aquatics center here in Federal Way. Our trip is over yet the benefits of it are just beginning.

Tina Saravanja and Kirsten Trout are Decatur

High School students and members of the school's DECA (Distributive Education Clubs of America) Club. Saravanja and Trout have made promotion of the Goodwill Games pool under construction in West Campus their two-year DECA project. Their subsequent contacts with Bob Walsh, an inviter to travel to Russia this summer.

Federal Way man is killed in car accident

A Federal Way man was killed early Thursday morning when the car he was driving collided head-on with a car traveling the wrong way on Interstate 5.

Thomas Pedron, 26, was killed when his southbound vehicle collided with a car driven by Deborah Dymarkowski, 30, of Kent, according to the state patrol. The accident occurred at 1:20 a.m. near the State Route 516 interchange on I-5 near Midway.

Pedron died immediately. Dymarkowski was taken to Harborview Medical Center where she was in satisfactory condition with head and chest injuries. The patrol is investigating the accident.

Hylebos panel to meet

The Hylebos and Lower Puget Sound Basin Citizen Advisory Committee will hold a public information meeting about the role of the new city of Federal Way in surface water management.

The meeting will be held 7:30 p.m., Aug. 29, in the Decatur High School library.

Representatives from King County Public Works, Parks, Planning and Resources, and the Puget Sound Water Quality

Authority will discuss state regulations the new city will have to consider to improve water quality in Hylebos Creek.

Officials will also discuss pollution-prevention measures the city could take, such as public education, sensitive-area protection programs and environmental review.

For more information on the meeting, call Roz Glasser at 296-6519.

District ponders donation

Richard Harris, superintendent of Federal Way School District, says district administrators still are cautiously considering an opportunity to receive $41,000 from developers of four local apartment projects.

"We're reviewing the issue with our legal council and with a mitigation task force in King County," Harris said. "All we're concerned about is boxing ourselves into something we might later regret."

The $41,000 sum is intended to help compensate for added enrollment stress on local schools caused by the new apartments. The promises of money were obtained from developers by DIRE (Development Resistance Impact Exercise), a local land-use watchdog group. DIRE agreed to drop appeals of the projects in exchange for the contributions to schools.

Harris said the money, which would go into the school district's general fund, has not been officially offered to the district. Nor have district administrators seen any written agreements between DIRE and the developers, he added.

"There are still a lot of unanswered questions," he said.

Debbie Ertel, president of DIRE, said that paperwork will be delivered to the district soon. DIRE had announced the developers' offers Aug. 3.

Meanwhile, a King County task force is scheduled to issue a report in December on requiring mitigation fees from developers. The offers to the Federal Way School District were voluntary.

Foreign students need families

The American Institute for Foreign Study needs two Federal Way families to host a Spanish 16-year-old and a Japanese 17-year-old for the coming academic term.

For information about exchange students through AIFS, contact the program's local coordinator, Jan Brouer, at 839-6262, or AIFS at 1-800-322-HOST.

Sex-offender laws to get beefing up

• Provide enough money to adequately fund the new programs.

Those who attend a hearing will also have the opportunity to review the task force's progress to date. The subcommittee charged with reviewing how the different branches of the legal system interact has prepared a report on how it works and what gaps need filling. That report is available to the public.

In it is a brief history of how Washington has dealt with sex offenders in the past.

Prior to 1984, "sexual psychopaths" could be confined indefinitely to state hospitals such as Eastern or Western State Hospitals. But, according to the report, space in those treatment programs was so tight that more than 70 percent of convicted sex offenders ended up in outpatient programs while on probation.

AFTER 1984, when the sexual psychopath law was repealed, repeat offenders who used weapons and direct violence in committing their crimes were required to serve prison terms.

Other offenders could be sentenced to treatment if the court ruled that option to be in the best interest of the offender and society. Those treatment centers were in hospitals.

Within a year, however, several offenders had escaped from their treatment programs and reoffended. Public outcry lead to the treatment programs being moved behind bars at the Twin Rivers Corrections Center in Monroe in 1986.

However, there remains a non-prison option for first-time offenders who don't use weapons or violence in committing their crimes.

Based upon an evaluation by a "sex-offender treatment professional," the offender may receive a suspended sentence and mandatory treatment in a community setting, while being supervised by the state Department of Corrections.

Washington has no license requirement or standards of competency for sex-offender treatment professionals. The report by the task force points out that it is "conceivable that someone could evaluate and treat sex offenders and have no experience or training in treating sexual deviancy."

PAULA JELLISON, who works for the King County Prosecutor, is coordinating the release of information about the task force.

She said Minnesota is the only other state that has come close to tackling the issue, but that the laws drafted and adopted there don't go as far as Washington wants. Other states have addressed even smaller parts of the issue.

Washington will probably end up with something other states will turn to, she speculated. For information concerning the task force, call its Olympia office, 586-8753.

Burner options might be limited in study

natives when the plant is already under construction?" Wolf asked. "That's not a fair assessment. So we went back to 1986 as if we were planning the project from scratch (and asked), 'Would these alternatives have satisfied the needs (of waste reduction and energy generation) and what would have been the environmental effects?'"

Air and water quality regulations that have been enacted or have become more stringent since 1986 will be looked at in 1989 terms, Wolf said.

MARK CRISSON, superintendent of city light, also attended the meeting and agreed with Wolf.

"If you look at today's standpoint, it's not objective," Crisson said. "You have to back up (and assume) you haven't spent $43 million. Now how does (the project) compare?"

"Our interest in the EIS is that it addresses the needs and concerns and stands up to scrutiny," Crisson added. "We want to make sure that, if it's challenged, we can defend it."

Although Crisson noted that the Puget Sound Air Pollution Control Agency, the state Department of Ecology and the federal Environmental Protection Agency have approved of this approach to the study, Wolf said it could be changed if enough people objected to it.

"This is a dynamic document," Wolf said. "Nothing is sacred in here."

Alternatives the EIS will address, according to the scoping document, include other sites for the plant, other sizes and other fuel mixtures and the option of not operating the plant at all. The EIS also will study alternative technologies and strategies to reducing and disposing of garbage and generating power.

Other concerns voiced by residents at the meeting Thursday, some of whom wore anti-incineration buttons, included pollution from the tideflats in general, noise and odor from the plant and disposal of the ash produced there.

Written comments about the EIS scoping document are due by Sept. 5 and should be mailed to EIS Coordinator, Steam Plant #2 Repowering Project, P.O.

Box 550, Seattle, Wa., 98111-0550.

Copies of the document are available from city light's community services office at South 35th Street and Union Avenue in Tacoma. Or Call 591-9759.

A draft of the study is due for completion by January of 1990. A 30-day comment period will follow before the final document is complete by March.

IN OTHER incinerator news, that state has responded that the city of Tacoma's suit against it is unfounded and that the city's claims are moot. Tacoma legally challenged a state law requiring the city to complete the EIS.

The state's response also counterclaims that Tacoma may owe back $10 million of a DOE grant for the incinerator if the city does not comply with state law, said Allen Miller, state attorney.

The DOE recently stipulated that if Tacoma wants the remaining $5 million in grant monies, it must complete the EIS regardless of the outcome of the litigation. The Tacoma City Council is expected to vote on that condition, but as of the deadline for this newspaper, it was not scheduled on the council's agenda.

dancing to pounding music and lyrics such as, "Dance for me, bitch."

When her set is finished, she circulates through the crowd. Her costume back on, she offers private table and couch dances to the patrons while a D.J. tells the exclusively male crowd, "There's no reason to be alone with all these beautiful foxes, guys."

She's one of a dozen or more dancers at the club at any given time.

While another dancer in a long, ruffled lace camisole has replaced her on the stage, she has found a patron willing to pay the $10 for a couch dance. She does her stiletto heels (but retains the rest of her costume), climbs up on the soft, overstuffed furniture and begins to write above the man, thrusting her breasts within a hair's breadth of his face before turning around and bending over to provide him a close-up view of her crotch.

SOME OF the other dancers are giving similar treatment to the customers, some following the county ordinance that prohibits touching, others blatantly ignoring the law. One dancer, clad only in a G-string and bikini top costume, gyrates exotically on the lap of one man. The same man has paid $10 each for a long succession of couch dances.

Marla Soler is shocked. And this from a woman who admits that she was a topless dancer herself when she was a young woman. Now married 17 years and the mother of a 16-year-old boy, the Sea-Tac resident has a different attitude about the trade.

"This is nothing like it was when I danced," the 32-year-old cashier said after a recent visit to the club. "I was shocked by what we saw. They were literally having dry sex."

Soler said she danced more than 10 years ago in a Tacoma topless club. She worked off-and-on for about three years. She said the money was great, but she would easily get burned out by the degrading job.

"But I would sometimes go back when we were in a tight spot and dance for a few months. But you can only take so much of that," she said.

Soler is concerned that Deja Vu will lure an undesirable element to Federal Way. She fears it will bring with it the drugs and prostitution often linked to similar clubs in other areas.

THE CLUB has a long history in Federal Way. It opened in the mid-1970s as the Brass Tiger tavern, but a few years later the owner was bought out and topless dancers were brought in. The Brass Tiger was closed by the state Liquor Control Board in 1981 after charges of lewd conduct by the dancers were filed.

It reopened later in 1981 as the Booby Trap, a topless bar that served only soda. It was closed by the state in 1982 and later that year reopened as the Excalibur Tavern, featuring live music and no nudity. It closed a few months later and was the Lucky Lady until early this year.

Ownership of the club in recent years has been clouded, and remains so. Norman R. Adams, who ran the Lucky Lady, was a close associate of convicted racketeer and topless club owner Frank Colacurcio.

"This is nothing like it was when I danced," Marla Soler said after a recent visit. "I was shocked by what we saw. They were literally having dry sex."

The Lucky Lady encountered difficulty because a county ordinance forbids hidden ownership in such businesses. Past profit-skimming and tax-evasion problems spawned the ordinance.

Under the ownership information section of Deja Vu's business license, Thomson is the sole party listed. She also is named as president and bookkeeper for the business. She could not be reached for comment.

Burns said the five Deja Vu clubs in King County and Spokane are owned under three separate corporations, although the Secretary of State's Office could confirm only two — Deja Vu/Everett/Federal Way and Deja Vu Inc., which is the Lake City club.

But even Deja Vu's ownership is unclear. Burns declined to name the owner. An annual report filed with the Secretary of State's Office in Olympia lists only Burns as the registered agent and Jacqueline L. Thomson of Normandy Park as president, secretary and sole director of the Deja Vu/Everett/Federal Way corporation.

King County business licenses require the name of the owner of

THE PRESIDENT and sole director of Deja Vu Inc. is Fred McGowan, who lists on the Secretary of State records a post office box in Seattle for an address. Thomson uses the same address on Secretary of State records. Both list business phone numbers in Seattle that belong to Acorn Investments of Delaware, Inc.

A woman who answered the phone there did not identify the company until asked, and when the caller identified herself as a newspaper reporter, she was told that no one there had any comment—on anything.

The president of Acorn Investments is Thomson and its vice president is listed as Neal Pulham.

A spokeswoman for the King County Prosecutor's office said investigations into the ownership of adult entertainment establishments are not done proactively, but when complaints are made. If a business appears to be running smoothly and without problems, the considerable time needed for such a search doesn't appear warranted, she said. She is unaware of any complaints concerning Deja Vu ownership.

Proving hidden ownership is difficult, she added.

Regardless of who owns Deja Vu, Soler wants it out. She promises to lobby the new city council and has been trying to enlist community support. Although she no longer lives in Federal Way (she lived here four years before moving north 3½ years ago), she still visits four or five times a week to shop and dine out.

SHE WORRIES that patrons will get sexually aroused in the club, then go out and attack a woman. She points to Ted Bundy's death-row confession that he was motivated for his murders by pornography.

"It's like putting fuel on the fire, and there are a lot of those people out there," she said.

Burns, who said he speaks for Deja Vu ownership because of the owner's policy not to speak to the press or give interviews, said any move to ban clubs like Deja Vu, or add further restrictions would amount to censorship, and would not stand up in court.

"There is nothing to show that any secondary effects from these businesses are harmful. This is simply an effort by a minority to engage in censorship."

"These businesses are clearly protected by the First Amendment and ...the state constitution," Burns said.

He also said Deja Vu has a policy of firing dancers who break the law.

"The girls know the rules and the club makes sure they know the rules and agree to abide by them. There's too much money to be made legally to allow that to go on," Burns said.

Most clubs serve soda pop to dance past liquor laws

Tough state regulations regarding topless and nude dancing in liquor establishments have all but eliminated such businesses, says a spokesman for the state Liquor Control Board.

The board forbids total nudity and table dancing in establishments that serve liquor, limiting the dancers' ability to make good tips, said Dave Goyette, assistant chief of enforcement for the board.

To avoid strict regulation, topless and nude clubs usually serve only non-alcoholic beverages, as does Deja Vu in Federal Way.

But cities and counties have reacted to that change by enacting their own ordinances. King County passed its version in 1985. It was challenged in court, but the ordinance survived that challenge, and police have been enforcing it since last summer.

The county requires that all dancers be licensed as entertainers. That license costs $52 a year and requires the dancers to submit to fingerprinting and background checks for criminal histories in drugs and prostitution.

The business must obtain a $500-a-year license and submit the names, addresses, telephone numbers and social security numbers of any partners, corporate officers, shareholders who hold a 10 percent or more interest, or others who have a substantial interest or management responsibility.

Terms of any loans, leases, secured transactions and repayments relating to the business must be disclosed.

Dancers are allowed to dance nude on stage in soda-pop establishments, but once they leave the stage for table and couch dances they must keep their breasts and genitals covered.

They are not allowed to touch the patrons or to allow the patrons to touch them, and simulation or performance of any sex act is forbidden.

A list of any and all entertainment provided must be posted on the premises. The stage and the interior of the club, including booths or stalls, must be visible from all common areas of the room.

No activity occurring inside the building can be visible from any public place.

Nude or topless clubs cannot be operated within 2,000 feet of any church, private or public school, and only in zoning areas designated community business (BC) or general commercial (CG).

Violation of any part of the ordinance can result in fines in civil and criminal court. If enforcement becomes a continuing problem the county can close an establishment.

Dancers in clubs such as Deja Vu typically are not paid by the clubs. The dancers pay the clubs a fee — at Deja Vu it's $35 a day — to dance, and they get to keep what they make from the $5 table and $10 couch dances.

Most clubs, Deja Vu included, require that patrons have a fresh soft drink on the table at all times. Prices range from the $1.25 at Deja Vu, to $3 or more at other clubs.

Eastside rezone doesn't need EIS

The rezoning of 15 acres on the east side of Military Road South on both sides of South 323rd Street, if extended, does not require preparation of an environmental impact statement (EIS), according to King County land-use officials.

Trammel Crow Residential, a Bellevue development firm, is proposing to rezone the property from single-family to multi-family zone.

The zone would allow 278 apartments to be built on the site, if approved.

To mitigate development, the county is requiring that no access be allowed onto Peasley Canyon Road and that a left-turn lane be built on Military Road South adjacent to the site.

Developers must leave a 25-foot greenbelt around one wetland and a 50-foot greenbelt around another. They must also leave a 50-foot buffer on each side stream that runs through the site.

Land Use Notices

The county's decision not to require an EIS may be appealed until Aug. 30. For information on appealing, call the county at 296-6662. Refer to the project by its file number, 216-89-R.

Unocal station to replace fuel tanks

King County officials have determined that the replacement of several fuel-storage tanks at a gas station does not require preparation of an environmental impact statement (EIS).

The Unocal Service Station is located at 29625 Pacific Highway S. Two 10,000-gallon tanks and two 550-gallon tanks will be removed and replaced with two 12,000-gallon tanks and one 550-gallon tank.

County officials are requiring that leak protection be provided.

The county's decision not to require preparation of an EIS may be appealed until Aug. 30. For information on appealing, call the county at 296-6662. Refer to the project by its file number, C8901324.

GI Joe's, office club join Costco at Campus Square

for the store, said the local outlet will feature ski gear, boating, hunting and fishing departments, and a full line of automotive supplies from car wax to carburetors.

"It's like taking REI and Schuck's (Auto Supply) and putting them together, with a little bit of Pay'n'Pak in the middle," Daniels said.

Office Club, described as a "superstore" by its owners, is a membership warehouse operation much like Costco. Office Club has opened 25 supply stores on the West Coast in its three years of operation. The Campus Square store will be the second one built adjacent to a Costco.

THE ADDITION of GI Joe's and Office Club brings the number of confirmed tenants at Campus Square to three. Costco, a warehouse-style, members-only retailer of general merchandise, opened its largest of 55 stores there last March.

James Lagerquist, president of Armada/Lagerquist, said his firm currently is negotiating with another large out-of-state retailer for tenancy under the firm's name is as yet undisclosed.

Some of the complex's 10 free-standing buildings will be restaurants, according to site plans. Two buildings will contain several stores.

A representative of Armada/Lagerquist said the company expects the 26-acre complex to be fully occupied within a year. The number of shops to be housed there depends on the size of those stores, the representative said.

Snider gets a taste of life in the Majors

By TIM CLINTON

You won't find Nick Snider's name in the Encyclopedia of Baseball, but the Federal Way resident won the 1987 Cy Young Award.

Snider took the mound two weeks ago today at Candlestick Park and threw four shutout innings against the San Francisco Giants with seven strikeouts. He also has the 1988 Charlie Tuna Award and two Mr. Potato Heads in his trophy case to show for his career.

The 43-year-old West Coast regional manager for Mattel, who also is the Federal Way Omni American Legion baseball assistant coach, accomplished all this by taking part in the Los Angeles Dodgers' Fantasy Camp program for would-be Major League players over 30.

He earned the so-called Cy Young Award for being the top pitcher out of 96 paying customers in the 1987 version of the spring training-style camp, then returned in 1988 only to get the Charlie Tuna Award for spending the most time in the trainer's room having injuries attended to.

As for the Mr. Potato Heads, he was presented with those as player of the day awards. The Mr. Potato Heads were autographed and given away by the camp coaching staff — all former Dodger players — after dinner each night.

One Mr. Potato Head was handed to Snider by Dave Lopes and the other by Frank Howard, while the Cy Young Award was given to him personally by former Dodger great and ABC announcer Don Drysdale. A Dodger trainer did the honors for the Charlie Tuna Award.

Mr. Potato Heads — which are sometimes given out to the real Dodgers after games — are a Hasbro product and not made by Mattel, which was upsetting to Snider.

"I told them to get Barbie Dolls instead, but they wouldn't go for it," he said.

BOTH OF the camps Snider attended were held in November at the Dodgers' spring training complex in Vero Beach, Fla., but he got to see action again at Candlestick when the Giant campers challenged the Dodgers to an eight-game series this summer.

Snider's team emerged victorious in six of the contests to prompt a big celebration.

"Sunday night we had a big banquet at a restaurant, and made fun of the Giants," said Snider.

Snider pitched eight innings in the series, including his seven-strikeout, shutout performance Sunday, Aug. 13, and hit 7-for-10 for the weekend.

The series opened Friday, Aug. 11, with four games played at a college field in San Francisco. Snider, who played baseball at Central Washington University played in two of the contests and hit three bases-loaded doubles — one of which struck the left-field fence.

Two more games were played at Candlestick Park Saturday and Sunday following afternoon games between the real Dodgers

ATTENDING TWO Dodger Fantasy Camps has helped Federal Way resident Nick Snider add several awards to his trophy collection, including the Mr. Potato Head seen in the foreground. It also led to his getting to play four games in San Francisco's Candlestick Park this summer.

and Giants. Snider, who played first base when not pitching, went 3-for-4 at Candlestick even though he was not fond of the infamously breezy field.

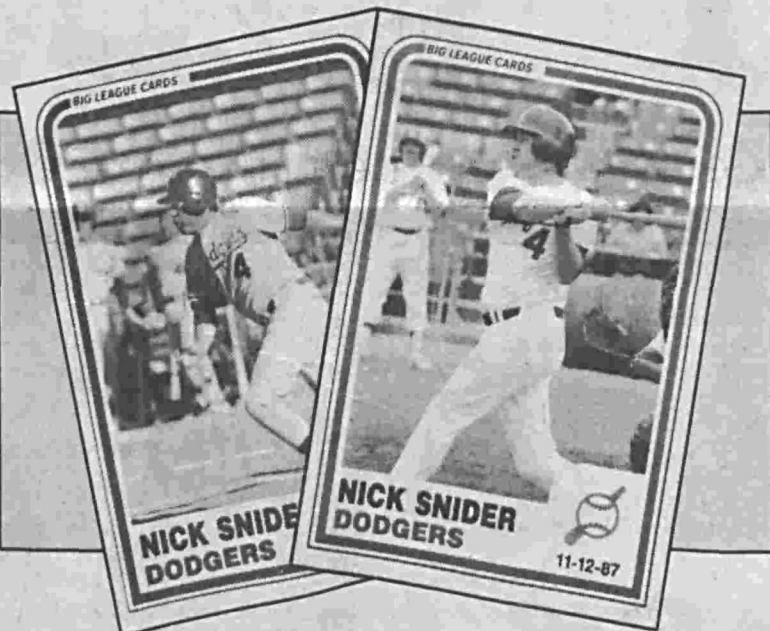

"The infield was so hard, it hurt to walk on the dirt," he said. "They told me if it was soft, the wind would blow dust in everyone's eyes all the time. We played after the regular games, and all the garbage and stuff was blowing down."

The Giant and Dodger oldtimers played before the regular National League games the same weekend, and when one drunk fan saw the Fantasy Camp players, he mistook them for the oldtimers.

"He wanted us to sign his baseball so our coaches (former Dodgers Ken McMullen and Lou Johnson) signed it, and then he wanted Pee Wee Reese," said Snider. "Then he saw the Snider on my back, and thought I was (Hall of Famer) Duke Snider. It told him I wasn't, then I finally autographed it for him and signed it Duke Snider. He left me alone after that."

NICK SNIDER'S admiration of Duke Snider is what led him to the Dodgers' Fantasy Camp in the first place, and was what brought him back the next year.

"The first year he was supposed to be there, but he had a heart bypass and couldn't come," said

Nick. "That's why I went back last year."

The camp also allowed him to associate with other former Dodger stars, including Sandy Koufax, Roy Campanella, Steve Yeager, Elwin "Preacher" Roe, manager Tommy Lasorda and pitching coach Ron Perranoski.

Upon arrival at the camp, the 96 fantasy players are divided up by a Little League-style draft into six teams that are named after the cities in the Los Angeles minor league system.

Snider was selected both years by former Dodger Ralph Branca, who has since become a good friend with Snider visiting him when he's in New York on business.

Branca is known for being the pitcher who gave up Bobby Thompson's famous home run ("The Shot Heard Around the World") in 1951 that gave the Giants the National League pennant instead of the Dodgers.

"When he goes out to talk to me on the mound, I tell him, 'Don't tell me how to pitch, you're the one that gave up that home run,'" said Snider.

Snider has also been able to meet interesting fellow campers, such as Sonny Carter, who is scheduled to go on a space shuttle flight in late 1989 or early 1990. Others include California legislator and former Vietnam war activist Tom Hayden, as well as the inventor of the Ginsu Knife that is often advertised on television.

The Fantasy Camps last one week, with participants getting home and away uniforms with their name and favorite number (in Nick's case it was Duke Snider's No. 4), a T-shirt, 50 baseball cards with their picture on them and other souvenirs, such as autographed baseballs.

The cards are made in Major League style, including a listing of their hobbies. Snider put down one hobby as "chasing his wife Nancy." He said he did that "so she'd let me go back."

Campers must get up for breakfast at 7 a.m., and at 8:30 a.m. they start stretching exercises and warm-up drills. The day continues in spring training fashion, with drills such as infield practice, base running and hitting both live and batting-cage pitching.

"I learned that if you stayed in the trainer's room when the guys did the exercises in the morning, you could get out of them," said Snider. "It was too hard and too hot. I'd come out for the games in the afternoon."

Snider also had genuine soreness and injuries to deal with, and at one time was hurting in five or six different places.

"But when you're on the mound the adrenalin gets going, and you don't feel anything," he points out.

During camp participants stick together as a team, including eating together in the cafeteria.

The six teams go at it against each other during the week, with the action ending with the campers' combined "Dodger Near-Greats" team playing the "Dodger Greats", or the camp coaching staff.

"It's a lot of great fun, and great friends," said Snider.

Other camps, which can cost as much as $3400, are put on by such teams as the Minnesota Twins, Milwaukee Brewers, Cleveland Indians and Cincinnati Reds.

Snider plans on sticking to the much more economical summer ballgames with the Giants.

"I probably won't do the Dodger camp again," he said. "It's expensive, and I'm busy in November because of Christmas coming up."

Good travel photographs could save a lot of talking

If a picture is worth a thousand words, then good photographs from your recent getaway or vacation are going to save you a lot of talking when you get back home.

But getting good photos takes more than just aiming the camera and clicking the shutter. While it doesn't require the most expensive equipment, good photographers do know a decent photo opportunity when they see it. And that takes a little practice.

Seattle-based commercial photographer Gary Hayes has built a business around teaching people just how to get good photos during their travels both in the Northwest and in Hawaii. Through a series of workshops, Hayes has given his pupils hands-on instruction in such scenic destinations as the San Juan Islands, Mt. Rainier National Park, the Columbia River Gorge and the Oregon Coast.

"Basically what I'm doing," explained Hayes, "is training everyone to see what a photographer needs to see."

Hayes likes to keep the instruction simple — nothing more technical than a discussion

Exploring the Northwest

by Cary Ordway

about depth of field, or perhaps "bracketing" to try different exposure settings. When anything technical is discussed, Hayes handles that "one-on-one" with each individual pupil.

Hayes conducts about 10 workshops a year, each accommodating between eight and 15 students. There are no prerequisites except that each student must have a working camera and film. Most workshops are held on weekends and based at a bed-and-breakfast inn, although students can choose to stay elsewhere or even bring an RV.

"I've had people with the most basic of equipment right up to professionals," said Hayes. "It's really quite a mix. It becomes a real group activity."

Typically, a workshop will start on Friday night with an introduction session. Then it's up at 5:30 a.m. Saturday to catch some sunrise shots in whatever location has been chosen for the workshop. Students get together again that night at the bed-and-breakfast to compare notes, then it's more shooting on Sunday.

The San Juans workshop differs in that accommodations are on a 42-foot boat which travels from port to port for onshore shooting. This one's more expensive, too: $225 per person, which includes accommodations, compared with $65 per person for the bed-and-breakfast workshops which don't include your room.

Hayes puts the San Juans at the top of the list for exciting photography because of the spectacular sunrises and sunsets, boats, wildlife, architecture and interesting people. Also ranking high are Port Townsend and Victoria, B.C., for their variety, and the Leavenworth/Stevens Pass area for excellent fall color.

Vacation Photo Tips

Hayes offers a few general tips for vacation photographers, points that are covered more thoroughly in his workshop sessions:

1) Re-train yourself to see what a photographer sees. Hayes explains that most people are programmed to see "things" rather than people and, therefore, don't recognize the full photographic potential of a particular setting.

He stresses that a photographer can create his art-form in just four ways: through light, color, form and expression.

Our workshops really are not about getting more good photos," Hayes said. "They're about creating something magic — being able to create a certain feel."

An example of good light might be sunlight streaming through the clouds — a "light incident" as Hayes calls it — and the remarkable warmth of color that you'll experience in early morning or late afternoon on a sunny day. Reflections and shadows are also variations of light that can enhance your photos.

A photographer seeks color to make his photograph more vivid and appealing. An example might be a shot of a scenic valley with a colorful flower, or person with colorful clothes, in the foreground.

Form has to do with patterns and lines that you might see before you compose and snap your picture; expression is getting the best shots you can of people.

2) Get close to your subject. Hayes says most amateur photographers don't get close enough to their subject. Simplify the photo down to the basic content, removing any distractions that might be present in the background. Don't try to get everything in one picture — take several.

3) Find a different angle. Don't just see something and snap the shot. Try taking it from a different angle. Stooping down and taking a photo from a low angle, Hayes said, can often add drama to your photograph.

4) Take lots of photos. Often the best shots are ones taken after you've snapped the first few of a certain subject. Vary your composition — experiment. Hayes suggests that you shoot color transparencies rather than prints to reduce processing charges.

5) Don't let weather stop you. Shoot no matter what it's like because different types of weather are good for different types of photographs. As Hayes explained, "if you never go out when it's raining, you'll never get any rainbows."

6) Use foreground. Pick out something to put in the front of your scenic — maybe a person or interesting object. And, as mentioned before, make it colorful.

Schools announce evening registration

The Federal Way School District has set up a special evening registration period for all students.

Spring Valley opens house

Parents and children are invited to attend the Aug. 31 open house of the Spring Valley School, a Montessori school for preschool to sixth-grade students located in south Federal Way.

Visitors will be able to see the school's two campuses and its classrooms, as well as meet with teachers during the open house.

Parents of preschool, kindergarten and first- and second-graders can visit campus 1, at 36605 Pacific Highway S. Parents of students grades three to six are invited to see campus 2, at 37515 Eighth Ave. S. The phone number for both is 927-2557.

The open house will be held from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Spring Valley classes begin Sept. 6.

are invited to register their elementary and secondary students with the school district Tuesday evening, Aug. 29, from 4 to 8. Registration will be held in the Board Room of school district headquarters, 31405 18th Ave. S.

Parents of kindergarten students are asked to bring proof of their children's immunization. Parents of older students will be asked to sign a release for their children's records from their last school.

The evening signup is designed to help working parents find time to register their children, said Judy Wall, communications director for the district.

"It also will get those kids on our lists quicker, so it works both ways," she added.

Parents also can register their children daytimes at the school they will attend this year. Parents can find the right school by asking at the nearest elementary or secondary school, or by calling the district's pupil services department at 941-0100.

Maps of school boundaries will be available to parents during the evening signups so their children can be registered at the appropriate school.

For more registration information, call school district headquarters at 941-0100.
